Former Central Intelligence Agency Executive Director Lyman Kirkpatrick reveals interesting facts about CIA support of student organizations and foundations when he appears on Channel 2's "Brattle Street Forum," Wednesday, at 9 PM.

Now a professor of political science at Brown University, Kirkpatrick is joined on this hour-long live discussion by Harvard Law School Prof. Roger Fisher and ITEK President Franklin Lindsay.

Fisher was attorney for two members of the National Student Assn., a group which produced headlines when its officers announced the organization had received funds from the C. I. A.

Talking with host and Harvard Government Prof. Samuel Beer, the three men seek to evaluate the influence the CIA has had on trade unions, intellectual magazines and student groups. They also will discuss why a super-secret agency is necessary in a free democracy, and explain how and why the CIA came to support educational groups.
